Inter-Parliamentary Meeting: Promoting Legislative Openness in the Region

During the Open Americas regional conference, ParlAmericas and the Chamber of Deputies of the Dominican Republic organized an inter-parliamentary meeting with the objective of promoting strengthened parliaments in the region through legislative openness. Parliamentarians and representatives of international organizations and civil society participated in a panel and working groups, outlining progress on open parliament efforts in the region, including good practices during co-creation processes and initiatives related to transparency, accountability, citizen participation, and ethics. The importance of continuing to advance this agenda, while incorporating a gender perspective and initiatives to expand the participation of women in these processes, was highlighted throughout this forum.

KEY CONCLUSIONS FROM THE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY DIALOGUE.

- Strengthening transparency and access to information, accountability, citizen participation, and ethics and probity is an urgent need and a commitment for those who recognize legislative openness as an essential principle of good governance.
- Broadening participatory spaces as well as strengthening the availability of virtual mechanisms for participation would enable citizens to meaningfully engage in public affairs and parliamentary decision-making processes.
- Public integrity should be an objective not only for the branches of government, but for society as a whole in order to build a culture of integrity based on the highest legal and ethical standards for all interactions between the public and private sectors, civil society, and individuals.
- Although several countries in the region have a legal framework for citizen participation, there is still much work to be done in terms of citizen ownership and their participation through these mechanisms.
